The great rank and file of union labor presented itself in parade to mark the triumph of one of the greatest national holidays. The Labor Day parade was an unqualified success from the start to the finish. The grandest float on the parade was the Atlanta Building Trades Council float, which was beautifully decorated with bright colors and the names of the different trades and their emblems. The float attracted the attention of the spectators and the parade was followed by a series of other floats, each one more colorful than the last.

The second prize float was awarded to the Atlanta Labor Day Parade Committee. This float was equally as impressive as the first one and attracted a large crowd of spectators. The third prize float was awarded to another group in the parade, and they too did a great job in creating an eye-catching display.

The weather was perfect for the parade, with clear skies and mild temperatures. The cheers of the crowd were deafening, and the drums and horns added to the festive atmosphere.
